Well recently I've needed to get in to it but I can't. I have tried recovering the email through google's forgotten password thing, but it doesn't work (it was set up with very generic, and scarce information). I know the password is stored in K9 and still working, so I was direly hoping I can get the password from this.

When someone is searching for privacy friendly email service on their android device, it means they want to get rid of google services. Probably they have already flashed a custom rom on their device without google's proprietary apps. In such case, having an open source mail client using a privacy friendly email service is favored.
